

AI School Of Design launches a practical AI course platform for product and UX designers

Bucharest, Romania — September 2026

AI School Of Design (<https://aischool.design>) today announced the public launch of its course platform that teaches designers how to use AI tools across the entire product design workflow — from research and prototyping to a live, deployed website.

Unlike subscription-based learning platforms, every course at AI School Of Design is a one-time purchase with lifetime access, including all future updates. The curriculum is built and pressure-tested by working product designers and developers, and is honest about where AI tools hold up in real projects and where they fall apart.

The curriculum

The launch curriculum is organized into two modules:

- Module 1 — Designing a Website Using AI (9 lessons, ~12.5 hours, $12.99): structured prompting, AI-assisted research, prototyping, documentation, design system components, design tokens, and accessibility.
- Module 2 — Building a Website Using Design and AI (13 lessons, ~11 hours, $14.99): turning a finished design into a working website with Cursor and Figma MCP, plus domains, databases, deployment, and a curated AI toolkit.
- Both modules together: $19.99.

Students learn with the tools professionals actually use — ChatGPT, Claude, Cursor, Figma, Figma MCP, Figma Make, GitHub Copilot, and V0 — and finish with a research-backed design direction, a complete design system, a live website built from that design, and a personal prompt library they keep for life. Graduates receive a verifiable certificate of completion.

“The goal isn't for you to understand AI,” the team says. “The goal is for you to apply it — and get results that matter.”
